Séraphin, sitting at the wooden table, counts his gold.

"Séraphin?"

He has a lot of coins so it takes him hours and hours.

"Séraphin?"

A voice keeps calling him.

"Séraphin?"

It's his wife, Donalda.

"Séraphin, the supper is ready."

She gets on his nerves.

"What do you want, woman?" He said, raising his voice.

Séraphin stopped counting his gold.

"I just told you. Supper's ready."

"It can wait."

"Séraphin, you haven't eaten since this morning."

"I said it can wait. Now leave me alone."

"But..."

"I said leave me alone, tabarnack!"

Seraphin gives a punch on the wooden table. Donalda, not wanting to face her husband's wrath, leaves him alone. Seraphin started counting his gold again. After all, he is greedy. Therefore, gold, for him, matters more than anything. Even eating.
